

Minorities in Construction: Can We Do Better?

[Article originally appeared in
www.awci.org]

By David C. Phillips

What challenges do minorities (not just ethnic minorities) face in the construction industry, whether they work on a job site or own the company? Should the industry change/adapt to help them succeed and thrive? If so, how? These are the questions we asked our AWCI member contractors.

We received a very broad range of responses.

Leveling the Playing Field

Robyn Kavanagh, senior director of human resources at Performance Contracting Group in Missouri, answered in great detail. Her answers are summarized here.

“Minorities in the construction industry, including ethnic minorities, women, people with disabilities and others, face several challenges that can hinder their participation and advancement within our industry: implicit bias and discrimination, physical and environmental barriers and a lack of support networks and mentorship opportunities.

“Addressing these challenges requires a comprehensive approach that involves implementing inclusion initiatives, providing equitable access to training and education, promoting a culture of respect and inclusion, and actively supporting the advancement of minority individuals within the construction industry.

“I can say without reservation, that our industry is making positive changes in this space. I have been lucky to bear witness to some incredible shifts in perception of these concepts over the last 17 years. That said, there is always room for improvement.”

The key measures Kavanagh recommends are addressing barriers to entry, cultural competency training, community engagement and outreach, supplier diversity programs and zero tolerance for discrimination and harassment.

Anthony Brooks, president of Platinum Dry-wall, Inc. in Arkansas, believes, “The biggest challenge for minorities is a lack of proper and complete mentorship. The industry could help by establishing mentor-protégé programs.”

Bill Fritz, president of Mission Interiors Contracting, LLC in Texas, says, “The main challenges minorities have in the construction industry are the language barrier and training. Women have consistently been taking more of a role in almost every aspect of construction. More and more companies in our industry have women and ethnic minority leaders as key principal owners in order to bid government projects as a minority.

“People with disabilities probably have the most challenges. Interior construction has a tendency to pick management from craftsmen in the industry. There are not many people with disabilities in that area of construction. If we can overcome language barriers, spend more on training, and think outside the current box, we will eventually overcome these challenges.”

Why 2025 will be a pivotal year for Mayor Karen Bass — and Los Angeles

[Article originally appeared in
www.calmatters.org]

By Jim Newton, CalMatters

Here comes the hard part.

Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass has plenty to be proud of in her first two years as the chief executive of the largest city in the largest state in America. Violent crime is down. Public transit ridership has fought its way back up. She’s replaced the city’s police chief and outlasted an irksome district attorney.

Most importantly, she has made inroads against the city’s tragically central issue, homelessness. Since taking office in 2022, Bass has concentrated on bringing the unhoused residents of this city inside, and she has made progress despite frustratingly severe obstacles. During a period where homelessness nationally increased by 18%, it has actually fallen in Los Angeles, though by an exasperatingly small 5%.

That is positive news for LA and its mayor, whose work and public standing was ratified recently when voters agreed to increase and extend their own sales taxes in support of local efforts to combat homelessness. Measure A, which appeared on the November ballot, was approved by 57% of county voters, issuing a clear vote of confidence in Bass. The mayor was the measure’s most visible supporter, and she argued that its approval was essential for her to press forward.

But as Bass moves to the second half of her term, her work is about to get a great deal more difficult, and the coming year may test her formidable energies.

There is, foremost, the change of the guard in Washington. Bass was elected two years ago in large part because of her experience and relationships. She could boast of allies in the state Legislature, in the governor’s office, in Congress and in the White House.

As 2025 gets underway, many of those will disappear.

Most conspicuously, Joe Biden will be replaced by a president who could hardly be further from Bass’s politics or priorities. Donald Trump will almost certainly make life for Bass more difficult in areas ranging from immigration — where the city of Los Angeles has pledged to not support federal deportation efforts — to homelessness — where Bass’s attempts to coax people off the street are sure to be at odds with Trump’s desire to crack down more forcefully.

Bass could call on Biden and did — to support the city’s work on housing, on immigration and even when a fire temporarily shut down the Santa Monica Freeway. Those calls are unlikely to be returned as quickly, or be as fruitful, under a Trump administration.

Moreover, Bass’s friends in Congress have lost sway, too. Republicans run the House and the Senate, and many are unsympathetic to her approach to issues. And the Supreme Court moves ever-away from the real-life experience of Americans in its strange mission to restore the nation to 18th-century norms.

Sacramento promises to be more protective. There, Gov. Gavin Newsom is entering his lame-duck period, but he’s sure to be replaced by another Democrat, and the legislature remains firmly in the hands of liberals and moderates philosophically closer to Bass. They recognize that solving issues in California requires tending to Los Angeles, the largest population center of the state as well as the hub of its Latino political future.

Newsom has been an unsteady ally for Bass, helping with funds and support but also striking out in unexpected areas, especially on homelessness. Even as Bass was making headway locally, Newsom changed course last year, seizing on the Supreme Court’s ruling in the Grants Pass case to declare that California would begin forcibly removing encampments on state property.

His rhetoric did not change much on the ground in Los Angeles, but it was both a distraction and a reminder that treating homelessness with compassion is hard political turf to hold.

Project: Brackney Landslide Area Pipeline Risk Reduction Project
CWO # 2020-003
Owner: City of Santa Cruz
Bid Date: February 7th, 2025 @ 2:00 p.m.

We are requesting quotes from all qualified DBE Subcontractors and Suppliers but not limited to:
Aggregates, Asphalt, Concrete Material, Slurry, Low Density Cellular Grout, Pipe Suppliers, Analytical Testing, Directional Drilling, Geotech Engineers, Striping, Surveying, Vibration Monitoring, Trucking, Hazmat, Valves/Water Main/Temp Facilities.

Project Description:
The Work of this Contract includes the construction of the Newell Creek Pipeline in the Brackney Landslide area in Felton, CA between Glen Arbor Road and Brackney Road. The Brackney Landslide Area Pipeline Risk Reduction project will relocate approximately 2,250 feet of the Newell Creek Pipeline to increase the resiliency and reliability of water supply from the Loch Lomond reservoir. The project area is at particular risk of geotechnical hazards with approximately 2,700 linear feet new 24-inch inside diameter (ID) carrier pipeline, including an approximately 1,685 foot long portion to be installed by horizontal directional drilling (HDD). HDD through deep bedrock formation was determined to be the most cost-effective method to avoid landslide hazards. The project will require new easements for realignment. Due to limited access and construction staging, the project will require close coordination with neighbors and other utility owners, and the County of Santa Cruz.

Project Description:
Description of Project: The Local AWPS project consist in two Phases. This IFB is for Phase that will produce 1.125 MGD of RO permeate and will include housekeeping pads for future skids and pipe headers sized enough to accommodate expansion. Phase I Motor Control Centers will also accommodate for Phase II electrical loads. The permeate produced from the project will be blended with the existing tertiary-treated recycled water to achieve an instantaneous TDS concentration of 400 to 500 mg/L. The Local AWPS will be constructed without interruption to the current treatment operations, except as allowed under special circumstances, such as piping and utility tie-ins. The electrical service, potable water service and fire water supply will be independent from the RWQCP service. New service connections will be made with City of Palo Alto Utilities (CPAU).

In the area of public safety, Bass has a new lineup for 2025. She named Jim McDonnell, an experienced police officer and former county sheriff, to head the LAPD. That was a smart pick, and it ensures that Bass at last has a kindred spirit in that all-important post.

At the same time, voters helped her move on from District Attorney George Gascón, with whom she was never close nor endorsed, only to see have him replaced with Nathan Hochman, a recently converted Republican whose vacuous, opportunistic campaign won him the office.

Hochman suggested throughout the race that he would use the district attorney's office to bring down crime. That's a dubious claim at best — district attorneys don't have much to do with crime rates — and calculated to antagonize Bass, who was touting the decline in crime as proof of her leadership while Hochman was portraying Los Angeles as a criminal hellscape.

Still, Hochman has demonstrated a willingness to change stripes to suit his political interests, so he may bend. Don't be surprised to see him complete his transformation from Republican to independent to — wait for it, Democrat — and to suddenly start seeing Los Angeles as a happier place, now that he's responsible for it.

If that happens, it may smooth relations with the mayor's office.

For Bass, though, political success will be almost exclusively measured by progress on homelessness. It's what she ran on, and what she will be judged by.

That makes 2025 pivotal. Her focus on the issue is commendable, and Measure A showed that the electorate remains with her. But the well is not bottomless.

Already, some council members and others are grumbling that the attention to homelessness is preventing other concerns from receiving attention. Environmental advocates and neighborhood representatives are among those who want their issues at the top of the city's agenda.
