

Why 2025 will be a pivotal year for Mayor Karen Bass — and Los Angeles

 Article originally appeared in [www.calmatters.org ]

Here comes the hard part.

Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass has plenty to be proud of in her first two years as the chief executive of the largest city in the largest state in America. Violent crime is down. Public transit ridership has fought its way back up. She's replaced the city's police chief and outlasted an irksome district attorney.

Most importantly, she has made inroads against the city's tragically central issue, homelessness. Since taking office in 2022, Bass has concentrated on bringing the unhoused residents of this city inside, and she has made progress despite frustratingly severe obstacles. During a period where homelessness nationally increased by 18%, it has actually fallen in Los Angeles, though by an exasperatingly small 5%.

That is positive news for LA and its mayor, whose work and public standing was ratified recently when voters agreed to increase and extend their own sales taxes in support of local efforts to combat homelessness. Measure A, which appeared on the November ballot, was approved by 57% of county voters, issuing a clear vote of confidence in Bass. The mayor was the measure's most visible supporter, and she argued that its approval was essential for her to press forward.

But as Bass moves to the second half of her term, her work is about to get a great deal more difficult, and the coming year may test her formidable energies.

There is, foremost, the change of the guard in Washington. Bass was elected two years ago in large part because of her experience and relationships. She could boast of allies in the state Legislature, in the governor's office, in Congress and in the White House.

As 2025 gets underway, many of those will disappear.

Most conspicuously, Joe Biden will be replaced by a president who could hardly be further from Bass's politics or priorities. Donald Trump will almost certainly make life for Bass more difficult in areas ranging from immigration — where the city of Los Angeles has pledged to not support federal deportation efforts — to homelessness — where Bass's attempts to coax people off the street are sure to be at odds with Trump's desire to crack down more forcefully.

Bass could call on Biden and did — to support the city's work on housing, on immigration and even when a fire temporarily shut down the Santa Monica Freeway. Those calls are unlikely to be returned as quickly, or be as fruitful, under a Trump administration.

Moreover, Bass's friends in Congress have lost sway, too. Republicans run the House and the Senate, and many are unsympathetic to her approach to issues. And the Supreme Court moves ever-away from the real-life experience of Americans in its strange mission to restore the nation to 18th-century norms.

Sacramento promises to be more protective. There, Gov. Gavin Newsom is entering his lame-

AI in Construction: What Does It Mean for Our Contractors?

 Article originally appeared in [www.constructionexec.com ]

By Patrick Scarpati

Artificial intelligence is revolutionizing the construction industry by enhancing efficiency, safety and decision-making throughout the project lifecycle. AI in construction involves the application of advanced technologies like machine learning, computer vision and data analytics to various construction processes. Through AI, machines can learn and imitate human cognitive functions.

The possibilities may sound endless, but as an industry traditionally looking from the outside in at technology, we must first step back to educate ourselves on the basics. This paper is meant to function as a starting point in your journey to understand AI and its potential impact on the construction industry. By reading through definitions, construction use cases and considerations, the reader should walk away with a base level of knowledge to ensure they can actively participate in future conversations on AI in construction.

DEFINITIONS

Artificial Intelligence: Per the National Artificial Intelligence Initiative Act of 2020: "A machine-based system that can, for a given set of human defined objectives, make predictions, recommendations or decisions influencing real or virtual environments."

Machine Learning: Application of AI that allows a system to automatically learn and improve from experience. In other words, machine learning helps computers do tasks like recognizing colors, finding pictures of cats on the internet or even suggesting what to watch on TV. It's like teaching the computer to be smart and make decisions by looking at several examples and learning from them. One common example of this is large language models.

Deep Learning: Per IBM: "Deep learning is a subset of machine learning, which is essentially a neural network with three or more layers. These neural networks attempt to simulate the behavior of the human brain—albeit far from matching its ability—allowing it to 'learn' from substantial amounts of data. While a neural network with a single layer can still make approximate predictions, additional hidden layers can help to optimize and refine for accuracy." Deep learning has achieved remarkable success in various applications, including self-driving cars, medical diagnosis, recommendation systems and more. Its power lies in its ability to automatically learn and adapt to new data, making it an innovative technology in the field of AI and data analysis.

Generative AI: A type of AI that can create new data or content, such as images, text, music or even videos, by learning patterns and structures from existing examples. It works by understanding and mimicking the patterns and styles it has seen in the data on which it was trained. The most publicly recognized tool in the last years is ChatGPT, built by the company OpenAI. ChatGPT is an artificial intelligence chatbot that can process natural human language and generate a response. It has revolutionized how we interact with computer systems and has influenced the evolution of AI. Other generative AI tools include Meta's Llama 3.1, Microsoft's Copilot, Google's PaLM 2, Amazon's Bedrock and DALL-E 3, also from OpenAI.

Predictive AI: A type of AI that uses data and machine learning algorithms to forecast future events or trends. It helps businesses and organizations make informed decisions by analyzing historical data, identifying patterns and making predictions based on those patterns.

PROJECT LIFECYCLE IMPACTS

PRECONSTRUCTION

Predictive Analytics: Analyze historical project data and current conditions to optimize construction schedules, resource allocation and task sequencing.

Optimized Design Development: Allow project stakeholders to identify the best design for a building based on real-world data; rapidly create and explore a variety of unique design options.

City Administrator Carmen Chu announces new leadership for San Francisco data and technology initiatives

 Article originally appeared in [www.sf.gov ]

City Administrator Carmen Chu today announced key leadership appointments to advance San Francisco's data and technology initiatives. Soumya Kalra has been named Chief Data Officer, and Edward McCaffrey will serve as the new Director of the Committee on Information Technology (COIT).

Soumya Kalra, Chief Data Officer

Kalra, a seasoned data executive with over 14 years of experience, will lead efforts to enhance the City's use of data to improve operations, transparency, governance, and equity. She will oversee DataSF's open data platform, establish citywide data standards and strategy, and collaborate with departments to improve data accessibility and governance. Kalra will also drive critical analytics projects, advance internal data sharing to support better decision-making, and support the implementation of the City's Privacy First Policy.

"I am excited to welcome Soumya Kalra as Chief Data Officer for the City and County of San Francisco," said City Administrator Carmen Chu. "Her extensive leadership experience in data infrastructure, analytics, and technology governance will be instrumental in advancing transparency and accountability in San Francisco. San Franciscans expect us to effectively deliver public services and the use of data and information in decision-making is absolutely critical to that process."

The City's Chief Data Officer (CDO) position, established in 2014, aims to enhance decision-making and service delivery across citywide agencies. The CDO leads the DataSF team, the San Francisco Open Data Program, and citywide data sharing and data science practices. DataSF has published over 600 datasets, trained hundreds of City analysts in current data skills, and contributed to innovative policies on matters from privacy to AI. DataSF is part of SF's Digital and Data Services (DDS) team in the City Administrator's Office.

DDS builds accessible, human-centered tools for San Franciscans to interact with and understand the City. DataSF partners with permitting, safety, & critical services departments as well as the Department of Technology, Controller's Office, & Mayor's Office of Innovation.

"I am honored to step into this role and bring my passion for leveraging data to drive meaningful impact," said Soumya Kalra. "Data is one of the most powerful tools we have to address complex challenges, and I look forward to collaborating with City leaders, private sector partners, and local communities to create innovative solutions that improve the lives of all San Franciscans. Together, we can build a more connected, transparent, and equitable city through the power of data."

Kalra holds a bachelor's in economics and a master's in mathematical finance from Rutgers University. She previously served as Senior Director of Product at Early Warning Services, where she led efforts to modernize data infrastructure, and at Robinhood, where she strengthened compliance, fraud detection, and risk management through data analytics.

In the public sector, Kalra held key roles at the Federal Reserve Bank, U.S. Treasury, and SEC, advancing financial oversight and implementing analytics for stress testing and regulatory decisions. Passionate about diversity in technology, she founded NYC R Ladies, a community that empowers women in data science, and serves on the R Finance Committee. Kalra will officially begin her role as Chief Data Officer on January 13, 2025.

Edward McCaffrey, Director of COIT

McCaffrey brings over 15 years of experience in public policy, government relations, and community engagement to his new role as COIT Director. COIT serves as San Francisco's technology governance and policy-making body, providing a collaborative forum for City leadership to coordinate and make duck period, but he's sure to be replaced by another Democrat, and the legislature remains firmly in the hands of liberals and moderates philosophically closer to Bass. They recognize that solving issues in California requires tending to Los Angeles, the largest population center of the state as well as the hub of its Latino political future.

Newsom has been an unsteady ally for Bass, helping with funds and support but also striking out in unexpected areas, especially on homelessness. Even as Bass was making headway locally, Newsom changed course last year, seizing on the Supreme Court's ruling in the Grants Pass case to declare that California would begin forcibly removing encampments on state property.

His rhetoric did not change much on the ground in Los Angeles, but it was both a distraction and a reminder that treating homelessness with compassion is hard political turf to hold.

In the area of public safety, Bass has a new lineup for 2025. She named Jim McDonnell, an experienced police officer and former county sheriff, to head the LAPD. That was a smart pick, and it ensures that Bass at last has a kindred spirit in that all-important post.

At the same time, voters helped her move on from District Attorney George Gascón, with whom she was never close nor endorsed, only to see have him replaced with Nathan Hochman, a recently converted Republican whose vacuous, opportunistic campaign won him the office.

Hochman suggested throughout the race that he would use the district attorney's office to bring down crime. That's a dubious claim at best — district attorneys don't have much to do with crime rates — and calculated to antagonize Bass, who was touting the decline in crime as proof of her leadership while Hochman was portraying Los Angeles as a criminal hellscape.

Still, Hochman has demonstrated a willingness to change stripes to suit his political interests, so he may bend. Don't be surprised to see him complete his transformation from Republican to independent to — wait for it, Democrat — and to suddenly start seeing Los Angeles as a happier place, now that he's responsible for it.

If that happens, it may smooth relations with the mayor's office.

For Bass, though, political success will be almost exclusively measured by progress on homelessness. It's what she ran on, and what she will be judged by.

That makes 2025 pivotal. Her focus on the issue is commendable, and Measure A showed that the electorate remains with her. But the well is not bottomless.

Already, some council members and others are grumbling that the attention to homelessness is preventing other concerns from receiving attention. Environmental advocates and neighborhood representatives are among those who want their issues at the top of the city's agenda. Bass has so far convinced them to be patient and to recognize that the city's homeless problem is so crippling that addressing it must eclipse all other priorities for the moment.

They grudgingly have stepped back, but patience is a hard-won commodity in politics. Unless Bass begins to produce demonstrable results on homelessness soon, those voices will grow louder. That makes 2025 vital for Bass, and for the city she governs.
