

How a ‘once in a century’ broadband investment plan could go wrong

 Article originally appeared in [www.calmatters.org ]

By Khari Johnson, CalMatters

Starting next week, California residents have 30 days to challenge maps that will determine how $1.8 billion is distributed to increase internet access in the state.

Actually getting the California Public Utilities Commission to accept changes to the federal maps is quite difficult, which internet access advocates with educational backgrounds are raising alarm over.

For example, after the COVID-19 pandemic hit and teachers at the Fresno Unified School District started teaching classes remotely, Philip Neufeld started work to ensure 7,000 students could log on.

Neufeld, a district IT worker and member of the Fresno Coalition for Digital Inclusion, started noticing patterns. He heard about students going to Taco Bell and McDonald’s for WiFi to do their homework, but he saw comparatively low download speeds across entire neighborhoods, disparities that reminded him of redlining, the practice of denying people housing and wealth based on their race. Neufeld and a colleague built an open source tool to gather 14 million speed tests across Fresno over the span of two years.

“What it shows is that it’s not just people in rural areas who have a real need for better internet,” he said. “It’s people in urban, low-income neighborhoods in apartment buildings and mobile home parks, and these patterns are showing up across multiple large cities that have higher poverty.”

Data collected from students in Fresno mirrors “digital redlining” documented in other parts of the United States. But the government won’t use data like the kind collected in Fresno to redraw a map that will decide how to distribute the money because Neufeld’s data doesn’t conform precisely to the strict challenge process that’s been put in place. That’s one of a number of ways advocacy groups say the process to challenge how funding for affordable high-speed internet is difficult. Some advocates have gone so far as to suggest the challenge process is broken by design.

‘Once in a century’ broadband funding

Shortly after the COVID-19 pandemic exposed areas of the digital divide — the gap between people with ready access to reliable internet and those who don’t — for students and workers, Congress passed an infrastructure bill in 2021 to invest more than $42 billion in broadband internet projects in all 50 U.S. states and six territories. California got $1.8 billion for such projects. A U.S. Department of Commerce agency oversees the program and the California Public Utilities Commission distributes the money to local projects.

Government officials and advocates alike refer to the Broadband Equity Access and Deployment, or BEAD program, as a once in a generation or, as a contractor working with the California Public Utilities Commission put it, a “once in a century” investment in affordable high-speed internet access.

Construction Employment Increases In 225 Of 358 Metro Areas From May 2023 To May 2024 As Evolving Demand And Labor Shortages Impact Hiring

 Article originally appeared in [www.agc.org ]

Construction employment increased in 225, or 63 percent, of 358 metro areas between May 2023 and May 2024, according to an analysis by the Associated General Contractors of America of new government employment data. Association officials noted that employment levels in some parts of the country have been impacted by changing demand for construction and ongoing labor shortages.

“A pullback in starts by developers of apartments, warehouses, and offices, along with spotty improvement in single-family starts, has held down job gains in some metros,” said Ken Simonson, the association’s chief economist. “But surging demand for data centers, manufacturing and power projects, and infrastructure mean contractors in many metros are still short of all the workers they need.”

Houston-The Woodlands-Sugar Land, Texas added the most construction jobs (8,400 jobs or 4 percent) between May 2023 and May 2024, followed by Baton Rouge, La. (8,200 jobs, 18 percent); Las Vegas-Henderson-Paradise, Nev. (6,900 jobs, 8 percent); Atlanta-Sandy Springs-Roswell, Ga. (6,000 jobs, 4 percent); and Miami-Miami Beach-Kendall, Fla. (5,200 jobs, 9 percent). The largest percentage gain—23 percent—occurred in Fairbanks, Alaska, which added 600 jobs. The pickup in Fairbanks was followed by two areas with 20 percent increases: Anchorage, Alaska (2,200 jobs); and Lawton, Okla. (300 jobs).

Construction employment declined over the year in 83 metro areas and was unchanged in 50 areas. The largest job loss occurred in Denver-Aurora-Lakewood, Colo. (-4,400 jobs, -4 percent), followed by Minneapolis-St. Paul-Bloomington, Minn.-Wis. (-3,800 jobs, -4 percent); New York City (-3,800 jobs, -3 percent); Baltimore-Columbia-Towson, Md. (-3,500 jobs, -4 percent); and Portland-Vancouver-Hillsboro, Ore. -Wash. (-2,700 jobs, -3 percent). The largest percentage decrease occurred in Augusta-Richmond County, Ga.-S.C. (-12 percent, -1,900 jobs), followed by Duluth, Minn.-Wis. (-11 percent, -1,100 jobs); Decatur, Ill (-9 percent, -300 jobs); Ithaca, N.Y. (-8 percent, -100 jobs); and Bellingham, Wash. (-8 percent, -700 jobs).

Association officials urged federal officials to reconsider the current approach to regulatory measures including Buy America that are limiting the benefits of new infrastructure investments. And they continue to call for a rebalance in federal education funding for workforce development compared to four-year degree programs. They noted the current ratio heavily favors degree programs that fewer than 40 percent of Americans complete.

“Most construction career tracks, and many other jobs in our economy, require specialized skills taught via workforce programs, instead of more traditional four-year degrees,” said Jeffrey D. Shoaf, the association’s chief executive officer. “Yet federal officials continue to invest in those degree programs on a four to one ratio compared to the workforce development programs our economy needs.”

5 Reasons Construction Professionals Can't Miss Autodesk University 2024

 Article originally appeared in [Autodesk Construction Cloud Blog, <https://construction.autodesk.com> ]

By Jenny Ragan

Why should you attend AU 2024? For starters, there is no other construction event quite like it. Autodesk University brings together AEC thought leaders and professionals in an environment that's primed for learning, networking, and innovation.

But let's get to the specifics. Here are five reasons AU 2024 is a must-attend for construction pros—plus tips on how to maximize your time during the event.

1. You'll Learn from Construction's Finest

AU 2024 has 500+ sessions on a variety of AEC industry topics, including 100+ construction-specific classes. You'll get to attend and participate in a variety of class and session types, including:

Industry Talks: Led by top AEC experts, these discussions are packed with thought leadership and insights. They will give you the opportunity to hear from innovators and gain new perspectives about the industry.

Technical Instructions: Skills-based instructional classes showcasing workflows, processes, and tips and tricks to improve efficiency and outcomes.

Roundtables: AU 2024's roundtable discussions allow you to learn from a group of experts with multiple viewpoints on trending topics. In these roundtables, you'll hear thought leaders discuss ideas and share their diverse views, so you can gain a deeper understanding of the subject matter.

Case Studies: When you attend AU 2024, you won't just gain knowledge; you'll also learn how to apply it. See real-life examples of successful projects from inception all the way to completion. Learn the challenges other firms have faced and the steps they took to overcome them.

We're not exaggerating when we say this is one of the biggest learning opportunities of the year for construction professionals. AU sessions will cover popular workflows and topics, including:

- Digital transformation and industry tech advancements
- AI and mixed reality
- Preconstruction and design innovations
- Construction, jobsite, and built environments

- BIM
- Industrialized construction
- Diversity, inclusion, and belonging
- Sustainability
- ...and more

No matter where you are in your business or career, you're bound to find something that resonates with you.

2. You Can Anticipate and Capitalize on Upcoming Trends

For an industry that's often mischaracterized as "traditional," the construction sector is always changing. And AU 2024 will empower you to keep up with these changes.

With sessions dedicated to emerging trends—including digital twins, AI, and industrialized construction—you'll have no problem keeping tabs on the latest developments in the industry.

3. Be the First to Hear About Major Announcements at Autodesk

So whether you're looking to improve project efficiency, secure that promotion, or drive higher ROI for your clients, AU 2024 will give you the insights you need to meet your objectives.

3. Be the First to Hear About Major Announcements at Autodesk

We're planning to unveil exciting announcements at AU 2024. Jim Lynch, SVP & GM of Autodesk Construction Solutions, will take the stage during AU 2024 in which he'll talk about what's next for our construction platform and solutions and the things you can look forward to as part of the Autodesk family.

4. Explore Emerging Technology

While you're at AU 2024, make it a point to stop by the Expo floor to discover what's next for your field.

The Expo at AU will feature hundreds of partners within the Autodesk ecosystem. Meet the developers behind the tech and get up close and hand-on with emerging solutions that can help transform your business.

5. Connect, Network, and Engage with Industry Peers and Thought Leaders

One of the best things about 2024 is in-person networking. This year's conference gives you dozens of opportunities to do this. Participate in

How a 'once in a century' broadband investment plan could go wrong

But advocates say maps compiled with data provided by internet service providers are highly inaccurate while the challenge process is short, arduous, and unfairly places the burden of proving that inaccuracy on people in areas unserved or underserved. They warn this could lead to the once in a generation money being misspent.

Inspired by Neufeld, Oakland Undivided did a similar speed test in late 2023 in partnership with the Oakland Unified School District and HubbleIQ. There they found that more than half of 18,000 students had download speeds that would qualify for BEAD funding and heat map patterns that resemble historical redlining. Speeds are 10 times better in high income neighborhoods in the area serviced by AT&T, Comcast, Sonic, and T-Mobile, but the FCC map shows that adequate coverage is nearly ubiquitous throughout the city of Oakland.

"We've been talking with a lot of other digital equity coalitions around the state in Fresno, LA, and we kind of all agree that this process is designed to make it impossible for communities to submit data," said Patrick Messac, director of Oakland Undivided, a nonprofit organization started during the COVID-19 pandemic that last year critiqued a map for distributing billions of dollars for a state broadband program.

Because of the difficulty involved with collecting speed test data, Oakland Undivided changed focus from speed tests and the challenge process to instead seek greater internet availability for community institutions. But Messac, who also works in IT for the city of Oakland, worries that the federal broadband dollars could get depleted before places like schools, libraries, and Head Start centers would be in line for funding.

"What we are finding, and others have noted as well, is that the National Map overstates coverage," said Adeyinka Ogunlegan, the vice president of government affairs and policy for EducationSuperhighway.

That group is focused on improving internet speeds in apartment buildings since roughly 1 in 4 people who lack internet access live there. It's one of the only organizations nationwide planning to mount challenges in all 50 U.S. states, with 800 planned challenges in California alone. EducationSuperhighway is also choosing to focus on availability challenges instead of speed tests. Ogunlegan wouldn't go so far as to say the challenge process is designed to fail, but said it's difficult for organized groups that have followed the process for years to participate, so it must be challenging for the average individual as well. Making people call internet service providers instead of using an online tool, for example, makes it harder to gather evidence that an internet provider does not offer services at your address.

John Windhausen is executive director of Schools, Health, and Libraries Broadband Coalition, a nonprofit organization with hundreds of member groups. He's hearing from members that the challenge process is very difficult.

"We are concerned that internet service providers allege that they serve areas but many locations cannot receive the level of service required by the BEAD program," he said.

Alexis Schrubbe is director of the Internet Equity Initiative at the University of Chicago and a member of the National Broadband Mapping Coalition. She helped make an open source tool for residents to carry out speed tests and agrees with other broadband experts who say the map for allocating the federal funding overstates coverage.
